and learning in schools in order to improve learning at scale. In an instructional rounds session, a group of educators from perhaps 20 to 40 in size makes a series of visits to classrooms to observe what is taking place in the instructional core. Low inference observation notes are taken about a learning problem identified by the school being observed. The observation notes are used to create a of Instructional Rounds.

Instructional rounds are one of the most valuable tools that a school or district can use to enhance teachers' pedagogical skills and develop a culture of collaboration. The goal of instructional rounds isn't to provide feedback to the teacher being observed, although this is an option if the observed teacher so desires.

Instructional Rounds is a networked approach to learning and leading change. It's based on the book, "Instructional Rounds in Education" by City, Elmore, Fiarman and Teitel. Each round follows a set process and allows our school to set a problem of practice, engage in professional reading, make observations without judgement, develop findings and propose recommendations.
