In The Score, Faye Flam examines how the desire to "score" has profoundly shaped males over millions of years. Sweeping from the origin of the sexes to the sexual foibles of twenty-first-century humans, Flam, a science writer at The Philadelphia Inquirer, shows how a small difference in the size of the first sperm and eggs resulted in an evolutionary tradeoff that has affected both males and females.

It is fair to assume that the closer a player is to the goal, the easier it is to score. However, that's not what the numbers indicate. The goalie has less of an area to cover and can attack any player with the puck. While the shooter may think they have plenty of open spaces from being so close to the net, the Shooters Illusion says otherwise. Another reason this isn't necessarily the highest scoring area is because a goalie will have a clearer puck vision and therefore will be unlikely ...

According to ResearchGate, the academic social networking site, their RG Score is "a new way to measure your scientific reputation". With such high aims, Peter Kraker, Katy Jordan and Elisabeth Lex take a closer look at the opaque metric. By reverse engineering the score, they find that a significant weight is linked to "impact points" - a similar metric to the widely discredited journal impact factor.
