The main thesis of The Story of Pain is that pain is not an objective experience, nor is it an entirely physical one. The way we feel pain is tied up with every other aspect of our lives; our understanding of our own anatomy, the availability of pain relief, our sense of pain as something strengthening or weakening, our sense of purpose, or the presence of others.

In the words of Virginia Woolf in her essay 'On Being Ill', from The Essays of Virginia Woolf, ed. Andrew McNeillie (Hogarth Press, 1994), a person in pain is 'forced to coin words himself, and, taking his pain in one hand, and a lump of pure sound in the other (as perhaps the inhabitants of Babel did in the beginning), so to crush them together that a brand new word in the end drops out'. Often, patients turn to metaphoric languages.
