Manfredo Tafuri, an Italian Marxist architect, historian, theoretician, critic and academic, was described by one commentator as the world's most important architectural historian of the second half of the 20th century. He is noted for his pointed critiques of the partisan "operative criticism" of previous architectural historians and critics like Bruno Zevi and Siegfried Giedion and for challenging the idea that the Renaissance was a "golden age" as it had been characterised in the work of earl

Manfredo Tafuri - Wikipedia

A key architectural historian of the second half of the 20th century, Manfredo Tafuri stirred up controversy by criticising modern architecture's alliance with capitalism. Like other celebrities – though these are more usually found in the world of entertainment than in architectural history – a remarkable reputation has accrued to Manfredo Tafuri, furthering the spread of his name and his books, but it has also distorted his message, encouraging the miscomprehension of his thought.

Manfredo Tafuri (1935-1994) - Architectural Review

Untying what Manfredo Tafuri called the "theoretical knot that must be confronted to construct a history" has taken many forms in the modern era: from the assertions of autonomy common to the art-historical discipline since the 1900s and the claims for "history" to actively inform practice from Giedion to Zevi to the introduction of theories from disciplines outside architecture with the aim of re-reading the discipline—"rewriting the book of architecture" as Foucault called it.

Theories in and of History - Architecture - e-flux

Tafuri suggests that the modern architectural movement was born out of an overlap in the end of the Romantic era's utopianism and the rise of realism, and that architecture was " the first discipline to accept the consequences of its commodification.
